Florida's 12 counties are: Alachua, Baker, Bay, Brevard, Broward, Calhoun, Collier, Duval, Escambia, Franklin, Gadsden, and Hamilton. Each county has its own government, and each has its own elected officials. The state government is divided into three branches: the executive branch, the legislative branch, and the judicial branch. The executive branch is headed by the governor, who is elected for a four-year term. The legislative branch is made up of the Florida Senate and the Florida House of Representatives. The judicial branch is headed by the Florida Supreme Court, which is made up of seven justices. The state government also includes several other agencies, such as the Department of Transportation, the Department of Health, and the Department of Education. The state government is responsible for a wide range of services, including public safety, education, and social services. The state government also plays a role in the economy, through its regulation of businesses and its provision of infrastructure. The state government is an important part of the Florida government, and it plays a vital role in the lives of the people of the state.
